For the use of the word "voice" in precisely similar ways is common to every day life. But in the Greek the genitive is used in Acts 9: 8, while in the 37th close. know of no one who claims that "a fool" answer from the files withdrawn, and case continued.

The State of Ohio vs. Wilbur F. Gilder-word translated "voice" should have a did not understand Hebrew. Here again

"Enquirer" exposes his own ignorance of common history. The knowledge of the events of history will explain at once to "Enquirer," or any one the consistency of my statement in this respect. Once more —Enquirer objects to my statement that Paul saw Christ, and that all was understood by him. Well it matters but little whether Paul saw him or not but the word.

FOR SALE—A nice House and lot, situated No. 25 Bank street, in this place, for whether Paul saw him or not, but the word sed by Paul in the Greek plainly implies that he did see him. But Paul was not told to go to Damascus for any explanation of the events that there transpired—but to be told his duty in the future. Here "Enquirer" shows his incorrect reading of the statement in simple English. It is true Luke wrote the entire book of the Actshowever he enotes Paul's own words in the last two accounts. I suppose it is quite consistent for a historical account to be the details of an event and this latter also be true. This is quite apparent to every thinking mind. Now before "Enquirer" agains accuses or "tricks to cover up" the truth, let him first take time to thoroughly investigate his subject—and understand the commonest principles of history and language, and he will not again get himself into the ridiculous plight of exposing his own ig-norance in trying to expose some other persons "tricks"—which are only fictions of his own inverted that the results of the own inverted the results of the results his own imagination.

Mr. Raffensberger or his entertaining lecture.

Mr. R. possesses three physical advantages which commend him as a popular speaker: a dignified presence, a rich, powerful voice, and a natural grace of manner; beside these he has talent, culture, and discriminating judgment. These latter so controlled the management of his subject as to produce a sense of entire.

Mr. R. possesses three physical advantages which few people posses, and with words which few people posses, and will especially interest readers who are not thoroughly conversant with Webster's unabridged. It will be observed that the subject is treated methodically, and that it is properly paragraphed:
